READINGS for SUNDAY, June 18

 2nd Reading - Romans 5.6 - 11
 Gospel - Matthew 9.36 - 10.8

THE HARVEST IS PLENTY,
 BUT THE WORKERS ARE FEW

Perhaps a little too accustomed to receiving this information, it sounds obvious to our ears that God is not mute, but speaks; he does not command, but promises; he does not ask, but wants to give himself; he does not impose, but invites. Yet they are the fundamental characteristics of his actions, never obvious, and which require man to listen, to respond to his appeal, involving his own freedom and responsibility. So it was for Moses, called to proclaim prosperity for his people in following God, so it was for the twelve first disciples, invited by Jesus to proclaim the Kingdom with the same humility and power as the Lord. God's invitation is free, it is the expression of his will for communion with man to make him a collaborator in the work of salvation; he asks whoever welcomes him the same gratuitousness for which every offer is not an imposition, but a free and liberating gift. Only in this way is it possible to reach the ultimate offering of oneself, in the image of that of Christ who, when we were still sinners, gave his life for us.

LA MESSE È MOLTA,
 MA GLI OPERAI SONO POCHI

Forse un po' troppo abituati a ricevere questa informazione, ai nostri orecchi suona scontato che Dio non è muto, ma parla; non comanda, ma promette; non chiede, ma vuole donarsi; non impone, ma invita. Eppure sono le caratteristiche fondamentali del suo agire, mai ovvie, e che richiedono all'uomo di porsi in ascolto, di rispondere al suo appello, coinvolgendo la propria libertà e responsabilità. Così è stato per Mosè, chiamato ad annunciare la prosperità per il suo popolo nella sequela di Dio, così per i dodici primi discepoli, invitati da Gesù ad annunciare il Regno con la stessa umiltà e potenza del Signore. L'invito di Dio è gratuito, e l'espressione della sua volontà di comunione con l'uomo per renderlo collaboratore nell'opera di salvezza; chiede a chi lo accoglie la medesima gratuità per la quale ogni offerta non è una imposizione, ma dono libero e liberante. Solo così è possibile giungere all'estrema offerta di sé, a immagine di quella di Cristo che, quando eravamo ancora peccatori, ha donato la sua vita per noi.
