Gospel - Matthew 22.15 - 21

BEYOND THE IMAGE ON THE COIN

Jesus faces a political and religious trap: the tribute to Caesar. His response is not a cautious compromise; rather, it lays bare the wicked intentions of the heart so as not to confuse reality, for everything has its proper place. Caesar has a right to his coin because it bears his image; yet man bears the imprinted image of God and, therefore, belongs to Him. Man does not always manage to perceive this. Even when the Christian renders to Caesar what is due to him, he never ceases to belong to God, the sole Lord of human destiny. Moreover, Caesar is not God, yet he can be unwittingly used by God as a potential instrument to help people. The believer is called to inhabit the world without absolutizing it and to recognize God's action even where it does not bear His name. To entrust the totality of one's life to Him through faith, charity, and hope—this is knowing how to give to God what belongs to God. Faith frees man from fear of the powers of the world; charity prevents civil obedience from turning into indifference toward others; hope rescues history from the idolatry of the present and opens it to fulfillment in God.

OLTRE L'IMMAGINE SULLA MONETA

Gesù è davanti a una trappola politica e religiosa: il tributo a Cesare. La sua risposta non è un compromesso prudente ma mette a nudo le intenzioni inique del cuore per non confondere la realtà, in quanto ogni cosa ha il suo posto. Cesare ha diritto alla sua moneta perché porta la sua immagine: ma l'uomo porta impressa l'immagine di Dio e, pertanto, gli appartiene. Questo non sempre l'uomo riesce a scorgerlo. Il cristiano anche quando rende a Cesare ciò che gli spetta non smette mai di appartenere a Dio, che è l'unico Signore del destino umano. Inoltre, Cesare non è Dio ma può essere inconsapevolmente usato da Dio come possibile strumento per aiutare le persone. Il credente è chiamato ad abitare il mondo senza assolutizzarlo e a riconoscere l'azione di Dio anche là dove non porta il suo nome. Consegnargli la totalità della vita con la fede, la carità e la speranza: questo è saper dare a Dio ciò che è di Dio. La fede libera l'uomo dalla paura dei poteri del mondo; la carità impedisce di trasformare l'obbedienza civile in indifferenza verso l'altro; la speranza sottrae la storia all'idolatria del presente e la apre al compimento di Dio.
